Plains & Pods Planning Guide

Planning With Plains & Pods

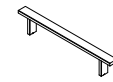

Plains & Pods embrace the potential of non-prescriptive design to elevate, humanize and personalize public outdoor space. Rectilinear, bold and architectural, Plains are large-format beams and platforms that vary in height and width to create multifaceted settings that speak to their users' individuality. Welcoming a wide range of interactions and enabling the full freedom of design in three dimensions, Plains can branch, network, stair-step, overlap, crisscross, create runs and more. The curvilinear counterpart to Plains, Pods seating and planters are designed to be grouped together in tiered clusters of respite space and attractive greenery. From open and welcoming communal zones, to areas for privacy and single seating, to quick touch-down points around the periphery, archipelagos of Pods bring social and aesthetic depth to the landscape. Plains & Pods are designed to work elegantly both together and independently, and are unified in the way they use minimalist, open-ended design to prioritize flexibility, adaptability, and user autonomy in outdoor space.

This Planning Guide first offers inspiration on how Plains & Pods can work individually, and then we will join them to illustrate how the two complementary products work together to expand an outdoor space's range of experiences, interactions and interpretations. The following is by no means exhaustive, but rather a jumping off point intended to familiarize designers with Plains & Pods and to inspire limitless new configurations unique to their projects.
